The Impossible Client: A Brutally Frank Guide On How To Provide Public Relations Counsel To A Controversial Entrepreneur

If you haven't provided public relations counsel to a controversial high-profile entrepreneur, you haven't experienced one of the truly wild rides available to PR practitioners. In this absolutely frank, funny and no-holds-barred narrative based on experience, John J. Barr explains how entrepreneurs are different than corporations. He shows how to build a relationship with these sometimes-volatile individuals and how to create a strategy that will extricate them from the conflicts they are so frequently involved in! This is a difficult PR challenge that no practitioner has previously addressed.

How To Write A Strategic Communication Plan That Works

In order to become business advisors to senior management, public relations people need to start thinking strategically. Veteran management advisor John J. Barr provides the perfect guide: in his long career he has helped executives face challenges from nuclear waste disposal to contaminated food recalls to angry investors. His comprehensive guide includes a lifetime of experiences. It's a step-by-step template, with helpful examples to guide the reader through every part of the process. Novice and intermediate public relations people won't find a more helpful, clear or compulsively readable text than this classic.

How To "Crisis-Proof" Your Organization In 2002 And Beyond

Most large corporations, having learned the lessons of Tylenol, Bhopal and Perrier, now have in place some sort of crisis preparedness plan. However, many organizations still haven't properly thought through a comprehensive approach to managing crisis communications, and better yet, to testing their preparedness. (And many small to medium sized companies don't have a plan of any kind). This Practice Guide addresses both needs. John J. Barr has managed major crises in many organizations and has helped many others create and test crisis plans. This Guide offers detailed templates for both, together with "war stories" that bridge the gap between theory and practice!
